PRESEASON GAME #4: New Orleans Saints

Thursday, 8:00PM Superdome New Orleans, LA

Reggie Bush and company look to end Miami's "feel good" momentum

For about one quarter tonight we will see the starters and core of the new look Miami Dolphins against a very good New Orleans team. Unfortunately, there won't be much to take away from it. This the fourth and final preseason game is more about finalizing the roster and making decisions than it is about winning the game. Don't get me wrong the Dolphins would LOVE to come out of this game on the same high that they have been on for the last two weeks. But in the end it will be about sorting out the third running back positions, getting the offensive line settled, and doing the evaluations that will make for some tough cuts come this Saturday. This is the final tune up before the kick-off against the NY Jets on September 7th and that is all it is. So take out your note pads, set the DVR and watch those 2nd and 3rd tier players and see who makes the plays needed to stay as a part of this football team.
