Written by Josh Evans
Tuesday, 15 January 2013 17:23

HARRIS WILL COACH DEFENSIVE BACKS

Ben Volin of the Palm Beach Post reported Tuesday morning that Dolphins head coach Joe Philbin is currently reviewing the performance of all his assistant coaches from the 2012 season. It is being reported that Philbin is expected to retain his entire staff and provide some much needed continuity to a franchise that experiences change almost annually.

There will be one "change" to the coaching staff in 2013, but it could be considered more of a promotion. Volin is reporting this afternoon that former Pro Bowl Packers cornerback Al Harris will be joining the staff in a more regular role
. Harris was a coaching intern with the Dolphins in 2012 and will now serve as a defensive assistant. With the promotion having not yet been announced by the team, an official title is unknown at this time. It would be expected though that he will serve as assistant defensive backs coach under current defensive backs coach Lou Anarumo.

In addition to playing 7 seasons for the Packers, Harris also played 5 seasons for the Eagles and spent one season with the Dolphins and one with the Rams.

January 25th Update - Al Harris will be joining the Kansas City Chiefs staff as their Secondary Coach. Harris had originally intended to join the Dolphins staff as assistant defensive backs coach.

TELL US WHAT YOU THINK IN THE FINHEAVEN FORUMS!