The only win the Miami Dolphins had in 2007 came against the Baltimore Ravens and few of us will forget the euphoria that we felt to just to win one game. But this year is a different year and these are two different teams. This is particularly the case in Miami where the Dolphins are now 2-3 and have turned the NFL on its head with the Wildcat formation. With this exciting new formation the Fins have found a way to win on offense with an inferior passing game and by taking advantage of Ronnie Brown's physical talents. The defense however has become a variable Jekyll and Hyde situation where they have looked dominant at times and hapless at other. How painful was that final Texan drive last week?

So in comes Baltimore with rookie QB Joe Flacco who looks to rebound from some shaky outings the last two weeks. They also bring that always tough and always physical defense that is anchored by linebacker Ray Lewis. This is a great week to see how the young Miami team counces back after a crushing loss to the Texans. Particularly on defense where they gave up 379 passing yards. If ever there was a chance to make the statement that this is a different Miami team this is the game to do it. In the last seven years we have seen the team buckle under adversity and hang their heads when things went wrong. Can this younger, faster and hungrier team prove that the Patriots and Chargers game were not flukes? Can Ronnie and the Wildcat find some room against the stingy Raven defense?
